Built in 1961, this building is located at 114 Winn St.; the building now houses the Marshall Simonds Middle School. The building was rechristened with Marshall Simonds' name in 1973. According to Fogelberg, the ca. 1970s photo does not show ten temporary classrooms, which connected the two wings and which now face Winn St. Note the Fred F. Walker house is still standing, pictured in the lower left hand corner; the St. Margaret's School of Religion replaced it in 1964. For more information on the Fred Freeland Walker house, see Historic homes and farms: item 145.

Butters' farmhouse and barns (later the Joman auction house) are at the left of the photograph; a drive-in restaurant is at the lower right. For more information, see Historic homes and farms: item 172 and 363.

The white building across from the Butters' farmhouse is the approximate location of Cheng's Wok (184 Cambridge St.) as of 2000; slightly north of that building is Skilton Lane. Murray's Real Estate office (27 Cambridge St.) is north of the Butters' farmhouse, on the right-hand side of Cambridge St.

The drive-in was the Flying Saucer, operated by Joe Galipeau; the drive-in was located approximately where Dunkin' Donuts (182A Cambridge St.) is located as of 2000. According to Fogelberg's article, "Joe's Diner," Theodore Murray (who owned the land the diner was located on) was formerly a sandwich shop next to the old Wilmington High School; when Wilmington built a cafeteria, the building became obsolete. TM bought the building and moved it to Burlington, renting it to Joe Galipeau as a diner. Fogelberg noted that "local high school students met there in the afternoons, politicians frequented the place in the evening, and truck drivers soon found it a good place to get a cup of coffee and a donut" (Daily Times Chronicle, Burlington edition, October 20, 1992). The drive-in later operated as Kemps' Hamburgers.

Mr. And Mrs. M. P. Peterson, 14 Taylor Avenue, Burlington, Mass. 01803 is stamped on the verso.
